Don't Get Tricked: Protecting Yourself from Senior Scams and Fraud

Fraud targeting older adults is becoming more sophisticated, with many scams now starting through phone calls, text messages, emails, fake bank alerts, delivery notices, computer pop-ups, and messages that appear to come from trusted organizations or family members.

This practical tele-learning session will help participants recognize common and emerging scams, fake bank alerts, emergency "grandparent" scams, romance scams, investment and cryptocurrency fraud, tech-support scams, suspicious links, and AI-related scams such as voice cloning and deepfake impersonation.

Participants will learn how scammers create urgency, fear, and pressure, and how to recognize warning signs before responding. The session will also provide simple steps to protect money, personal information, and peace of mind, along with guidance on what to do and where to report if something feels suspicious.
